

BRECKENRIDGE NEWS.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1862.

WALLACE BREWER, Editor.

FOR GOVERNOR.
(Subject to the decision of the Democratic Party.)
HON. J. PROCTOR KNOTT of Marion.

A VALENTINE.
Dear Dr. L. D. P.—I choose you.
From all mankind I choose you to be my Valentine. I am discreet and true; One who'll not fear in fight for me;
One whom no Cæsar can move;
One who will stand undaunted;
Twice as bold as he who dares dare;
To strive and to stand;
To do this, and to be my Valentine;
And I'll be yours. True, Thine, Lester A. L.—S.Y.T.

THE THREE.
In the heart of a wood, Tell and stately it stood,
Waiting for me to come;
A brother came along,
Then a bird with a song,
"I guess I will sing," said the tree.

Then a wind from the north Came tellingly forth, Crying, "I am your friend to me!"
Then a brother came along, Being thus dismended,
"I guess I will sing," said the tree.

Then the woods rang
With the noise of a gang Of laborers, full of rough glee—The tree, with a groan, But thinking for labor,
"I guess I will sing," said the tree.

A SAD DEED: A CONVEYANCE TO A NEGRO.
A black slave: A conveyance to a negro, Frequent "smiles" make a taper feel red grief.

The harvest of winter is rained with short, sharp and pointed.

Norman has so many ties blinding it to earth as a railroad.

The articles in the paper of needles are short, sharp and pointed.

THE new five cent piece, like Bob Ingersoll, don't trust in God.

Some people are the brooks of humanity —they are always mirroring.

A virtuous wife makes home a heaven; a wanton one converts it into a hell.

Some girls, like old moths, require a great deal of powder, and then fail to go off.

From the size of her foot, the Langtry is unquestionably a large wold woman.

With the pre-empted land-schemes, the river bottom farmers propose to take lessons in fencing.

A very old child is the eye of its father's eye. A diabolical one is the eye of his.

WHATEVER THE OCHILTREE makes a speech, the fingers of the god of darkness "sweep the living hair."

A young woman writes us as "Sweet Home" were written. "Be it ever so humble, there's no place like a neighbor."

The Cincinnati News furnished the best and most reliable reports of the recent tragic festival of paper in that city.

The new chairman of the Breckinridge county democratic committee is named Judd, suggesting hard and fast for his brother's travel.

There is a world of difference between a successful and an unsuccessful attempt at suicide. —[Exchange. Exactly, the future world.]

Norman is ever made by necessity.—[Ingerson. And yet you are making a thumping big lie by the recital of the star's running.

How is the heaven of the heart, love is its god, wife, children and friends are the blessed tie that fit it with life, light and gladness.

"Wear all thy father, I have three wills," repeated Jim Mulvaney's mother, as she handed him a farewell kiss on his lips to Texas.

Ferguson Garrison was in Louisville, but he had hidden himself. He had probably heard of the skillfulness of Louisville edit-tors with the pistol.

There is one thing else than successful love, and that is a girl dreams for a party while her own is waiting for her in a cold porter.

Love may be blind as some assert, but it is not of record that it made the mistake of killing the mother when it was reaching for the daughter.

The other day we asked a "Professor" who has two beans which she preferred.
"When I am with either of them," she replied, "I prefer the other."

A MEMBER of the Indiana legislature is named Calfee. Persons for him to introduce bills are, we presume, recorded under the head of "Calfee-leaves."

CINNAMON has just passed through a season of opera. Returning from refreshment to labor, she is now preparing her lodges to work in the pump and ball-out degree.

By some men were measured the size of their souls, a square inch of cloth would make them a full suit of clothes, and leave against remnant to construct an acre-ward.

BOY INGERSON has sold more pretty things, some good things, and a few bad things; but he has drawn them all in the great sea of foolish things he has uttered.

The Yman is correct. It has been some 45 years since we last visited Frankfort, and that time it required about three street lamps to achieve one candle-power of illumination.

"TARIFF FOR REVENGE ONLY!"

Allied democratic papers like the National American and Louisville Post, that are anxiously waiting word from the Congressional Journal for its timely efforts to bring forward a fundamental democratic principle, are either wilfully ignorant of the record of the democracy on the subject of the tariff, or are wilfully deceiv-ing their readers when they charge that "A tariff for revenue only" and "injustice to child's talk when they claim that the phrase is without meaning.

It was the first great battle of argument occurred in Congress between the democracy and the federalists over the tariff question. In February a bill was introduced to take away the revenue duty on many articles of foreign manufacture. In some instances the duty was so high as to amount to positive prohibition.
Then, as now, the federalists claimed that it was their object to protect the infant industry of the country against foreign competition, and that the bill would not only injure the home market, but would also injure the foreign market.
Foreign manufacturers asserted that "a tariff for revenue only" was not sinecure, still the laborers are not exhausted.

It is well known that the present incumbent of the chief check over recently indulged in a scandalous quarrel as to which
of them should receive the nomination for the position from the approaching state convention. Now, it is not our purpose to decide upon the merits of this quarrel. We care not what bargain may have existed between them, and do not care to pass upon the merits of the various principles of the two parties. That is a matter for the constituents of either towards the other.
That is a personal matter that should be confined exclusively to the parties themselves.

But there is a phase of the question in which all the people of the state are directly interested, and that is, Neither Mr.
Buchanan nor Mr. Lincoln will be able to get into the office. The state is large and broad, and contains many people, each one of whom is as much entitled to the office as Messrs. Sheldon or Boyd. The people should be equal in party as well as in wealth and greatness. A reciprocity of interest will produce reciprocal and simultaneous actions to exchange our mercantile markets so that this measure becomes a law for the protection of their loans and workshops, and thus, by fair system of exchange of commodities all parties would reap benefit.
Although no prophet nor the son of a prophet, I can see in the future uprise in the state the object of the federalists in their opposition to the corporation and monopolies that would gather to themselves the wealth and power of the nation. Labor would be at their beck and call, and compelled to work for such wages as they would be pleased to give. Foreign protection would be closed against them and an era of comparative peace and prosperity would be ushered in.

The rule is, and should always be, for the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentleman who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the democratic party. He is a journal of distinction and has achieved for himself a place in the world of letters that Kentucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant to wealth and power. He is a man of modest and quiet life, and has no ambition save that of discharging his duty to his party, and in doing so, has done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increasing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

SOME PLAIN TALK.

When we come to consider the ab-surdities of the government, the illegible question disappears from the headings.

It was the origin of the phrase, "an insane tariff for revenue only," and it is a principle of democracy, practiced during all the years in which it administered the government, and the only character of tariff any democrat can consistently advocate or appalled.

We respectfully offer the following suggestion to the press of the state:

The position of register of public lands, while it may not be as essential as some others, yet justly brings with great responsibility the care of the public domain, and the position of collector of internal revenue, and the bill, and the most of the money that comes into the treasury, is nothing but a protection to the revenue system.

It is well known that the present incumbent of the chief check over recently in-
dulged in a scandalous quarrel as to which
of them should receive the nomination for
the position from the approaching state convention.

Now, it is not our purpose to decide upon the merits of this quarrel. We care not what bargain may have existed
between them, and do not care to pass
upon the merits of the various principles
of the two parties. That is a matter for
the constituents of either towards the other.

But there is a phase of the question in
which all the people of the state are directly
interested, and that is, Neither Mr.
Buchanan nor Mr. Lincoln will be able to get into the office.

The state is large, and contains many people, each one of whom is as much entitled to the office as Messrs. Sheldon or Boyd. The
people should be equal in party as well as in wealth and greatness. A reciprocity of interest will produce reciprocal and simultaneous
actions to exchange our mercantile
markets so that this measure becomes a law
for the protection of their loans and workshops, and thus, by fair system of exchange
of commodities all parties would reap benefit.

Although no prophet nor the son of
a prophet, I can see in the future uprise
in the state the object of the federalists
in their opposition to the corporation and
monopolies that would gather
to themselves the wealth and power of the nation. Labor would be at their beck and
call, and compelled to work for such wages
as they would be pleased to give. Foreign
protection would be closed against them
and an era of comparative peace and prosperity would be ushered in.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

The rule is, and should always be, for
the party to select from its membership
such men as are most fit to represent
respectably the duties of the office.

We have in our mind a gentle-
man who has for many years, nobly
and unostentatiously, performed constant
and laborious, and signal service for the
democratic party. He is a journal of distinc-
tion and has achieved for himself a
place in the world of letters that Ken-
tucky points to with just and ever-increas-
ing pride. Like the most of us, he is not
blessed with abundant wealth, and, again
like the most of us, he is not an aspirant
to wealth and power. He is a man of
modest and quiet life, and has no
ambition save that of discharging his
duty to his party, and in doing so, has
done his duty nobly and well.

THE BREWERY.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please send me
3000 long barrels.

Laurens University Battalions,
Laurensburg, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862.—Dr.

W. B. WORTH: Please

